Transparent Assignment Design

Transparent assignment design significantly boosts student success by eliminating ambiguity around expectations and criteria. When students know exactly what's being asked of them, their in- and out-of-class engagement improves, their confidence grows, and they have a stronger foundation for developing executive-function skills.

Assignment design

Purpose: (skills + why it matters/how it aligns with course goal)

Task(s): (delineated steps) Time estimate: __ minutes

Criteria: (explicit explanation of successful completion/rubric)
First step (optional): starter sentence/prompt to singular action:

Examples: link to "meets" & "not-yet."

Example assignment rewrite (before → after):

• Before, the assignment read :

Analyze the article and discuss implications.

• After transparency rewrite:

Purpose: Practice extracting claims and evidence to prepare for Essay 1. Tasks (15–20 min):

- 1. Highlight the article's main claim (≤15 words).
- 2. Copy two evidence quotes.
- 3. Write one 2-sentence implication for first-year students.

Criteria: Claim clear, evidence relevant, implication logical (see 3-line rubric).

First step (2 min): Paste the claim in the assignment window.

Examples: Examples of "meets criteria" and "not yet" are available in course library.

The following is an example of an ideally designed transparent assignment.

Assignment Title:

Mini-Analysis Essay (750 words)

Purpose:

This assignment helps you practice making a clear claim and supporting it with evidence. This is a foundational skill for all college writing and many future courses. You'll learn how to move from summary to analysis, which strengthens your critical thinking.

Tasks (__ min):

- 1. Choose a short passage from the course text (1–3 sentences).
- 2. Write a claim about what the passage shows or argues.
- 3. Explain how specific phrases or details support your claim.
- 4. Connect your analysis to one idea from class discussion or lecture.
- 5. Conclude with a 2–3 sentence statement about why this analysis matters.

Criteria:

Your work will be considered successful when it:

- 1. Makes a clear, arguable claim (not just summary).
- 2. Uses specific evidence from the passage and explains its significance.
- 3. Connects the analysis to a broader course concept.
- 4. Is organized clearly, with paragraphs focused on one idea each.
- 5. Uses correct citation format (quote + page number).

Anchor Samples Provided:

"On track" sample — shows clear claim + evidence

"Not yet" sample — mostly summary, no analysis

First Step (__ min):

Choose your passage and write one sentence beginning with: "This passage suggests that..."
